Remedo Onboarding Questionnaire

MAY 2026

This document responds to the Remedo onboarding questionnaire and the additional questions that followed our discussions on 22, 26 and 28 April. A separate Supplementary Brief accompanies it and covers the elements that aren't captured by the standard onboarding template – audience architecture, the referring-dentist positioning angle, NPS as a live brand element, lead-magnet integration and phasing.

How to read this document

Each Remedo question is shown in italic blue, with our response immediately below. Where a one-line answer is genuinely sufficient, we've kept it short. Where the question hides a strategic decision, we've given the reasoning so Remedo can design with the same logic in mind.

If anything here surprises you, please flag it. We're responsive and we'd rather adjust early than discover misalignment in iteration two.

Purpose & Goals

Practice Name

FAME Dentistry – 'A Decidedly Different Dental Experience'

What is the main purpose of the website? Is it to attract new patients, provide information, or offer appointment scheduling, brand awareness?

Lead capture and conversion across two primary commercial flows: (1) business leaders considering FAME's concierge dental service, and (2) general patients researching complex implant or cosmetic work.

Trust and credentialing for a third audience: referring dentists who already send their most complex cases to Ferhan and Tariq. And a fourth audience down the road: dentists seeking training and mentorship.

Sitting underneath all of that, the site is a publishing platform for the educational content that drives our AI/answer-engine presence – the White Knight Positioning Report, First Impressions, Final Decisions, NPS journey content, and a forthcoming podcast.

This is not a brochure site. Every page should perform a job: capturing intent, building peer credibility, or feeding AEO. A list of services with photos is the baseline we're explicitly trying to leap past.

Are there any websites whose design or elements you admire?
Please provide links and explain what you like about them.

A curated reference list will follow once we've worked through your initial design directions, so we're not anchoring the design conversation prematurely. As an early steer:

- Soho House, Edition Hotels, Aman – insider, members'-club warmth without screaming 'luxury'.

<https://www.sohohouse.com/>

<https://www.editionhotels.com/>

<https://www.aman.com/>

- Coutts – old-money credibility translated into current digital language.

<https://www.coutts.com/>

- Maven Clinic, Mayo Clinic – healthcare-grade authority done well in digital.

<https://www.mavenclinic.com/>

<https://www.mayoclinic.org/>

- Le Labo – storytelling through videography (I thought £105 for a denim tote bag was insane until I watched the video.)

<https://www.lelabofragrances.com/le-labo-tote-1236.html?size=os>

<https://www.lelabofragrances.com/films/denim-tote.html>

What we are not looking to emulate: the typical UK private dental aesthetic of stock smile photography, soft pastels, trust-badge clutter, and 'Book Now' floating buttons. Our reference list is deliberately drawn from outside dentistry.

What colours do you associate with your practice?

Primary palette per the FAME branding pack supplied separately.

- Dark navy (the deep blue/black that anchors the emblem).
- Mid teal-blue (used as the primary signage and brand panel colour).
- Warm cream/beige (secondary surface colour for collateral).
- A confident yellow as occasional accent (already used in social mock-ups).

- White and black for type and reverse applications.

The brand brief steered explicitly premium and luxurious rather than industrial. We are open to your interpretation of how this palette translates to web – we'd rather you propose a refined application than slavishly mirror the print collateral.

Are there specific colours you prefer to avoid?

- Bright clinical white-on-white – we are not a medical lab.
- Soft pinks, lilacs, baby blues – the typical 'approachable family dentist' palette.
- High-saturation greens – they read as pharmacy or dental insurance.
- Gold-on-black – we want quiet luxury, not Versace.
- Anything orange or pastel.

How would you describe the desired style of your website? (e.g., modern, minimalist, graphic-oriented, or any specific style)

Editorial. Confident. Restrained. Closer to a private bank or members' club than to a healthcare provider. Strong typography doing most of the work. Genuine whitespace. Photography that feels commissioned, not curated. Subtle motion only. Fast loading. Should feel grown-up.

If we've done this well, a Morgan Stanley managing partner will look at the homepage and feel they're in safe hands within 5 seconds. That feeling is the brief.

Who is your target audience? Are you looking to attract families, individuals, specific age groups, or demographics?

Three distinct audiences – we are not optimising for families. The supplementary brief expands on this, but in summary:

1. Business leaders and entrepreneurs in central Scotland (primary commercial focus, concierge service).
2. General consumer patients researching dental implants or complex cosmetic work – typically 45–65, professional, financially comfortable.
3. Referring dentists across the UK – a major existing source of work for both Ferhan and Tariq.

The site needs to serve all three without alienating any. That is the hardest single design problem in this project, and the one we most need your help thinking through.

What are the typical concerns or questions your patients have when visiting your website?

They differ sharply by audience. Some of the most common we have to answer:

For implant and complex-work patients:

- 'Are these people actually any good, or is this just slick marketing?'
- 'What does it actually cost – and what are the hidden extras?'
- 'How much disruption to my life? How long will I be out of action?'
- 'Is this safer than going to Turkey?'
- 'What happens if something goes wrong?'

For business leaders considering the concierge service:

- 'Can I really do this without losing time from work?'
- 'How discreet is this?'
- 'Am I going to feel out of place in a dental setting?'
- 'Are these people going to take my time and standards seriously?'

For referring dentists:

- 'Will my patient come back to me, or will FAME try to keep them?'
- 'Will I be kept properly informed during the case?'
- 'Will the work make me look good?'

Each of these has a specific page or section of the site that should answer it without being asked.

Do you have any image preference for your website? (Smiling images, photos of the office, staff, patients, procedures, etc.)

- Heavy use of architectural and interior photography of the new Scotland Street building. The £2M+ build is a genuine differentiator and should be visible.
- Editorial portraits of Ferhan and Tariq – closer to a CEO profile shoot than dental headshots.
- Documentary-style photography of clinical workflow, treatment planning, the training suite – again, editorial register.

- Concierge moments: arrival, consultation suite at desk-height, planning meetings.
- Minimal stock photography. Zero stock smile shots. No teeth-in-isolation imagery.

We will commission a dedicated photo and video shoot. The photography brief should come from your design direction – the more clarity we lock in early, the more useful the shoot will be.

Are there specific images or visuals you already have that you would like to incorporate?

- Logo/branding guide – supplied separately
- Building exterior renders/construction documentation – to be supplied as photography becomes available pre-opening.
- Edinburgh Dental imagery is available for environment quality reference, but we will not be reusing it on the FAME site.

Do you have any patient testimonials or success stories that you would like to feature?

Yes. Ferhan has a substantial existing patient base from Edinburgh. We will identify notable business figures and gain agreement where possible to be quoted by name. Recommended treatment:

- Named, credentialled testimonials with full name, role and (where consented) company – not anonymous 'Sarah, 52'.
- Peer testimonials from referring dentists – unusual on a dental site, and one of the deliberate positioning levers (see supplementary brief).

Anonymous testimonials are a credibility tax we won't pay. The audience expects real names from real people.

Website Functionality

Are there any specific features or functionalities you want on your website? (e.g., contact form, blog)

Yes. Here's a shortlist:

- Concierge enquiry flow – form to inbox, with a personal call back from Ferhan's PA within 2 hours during working hours.

- Founding Members application form – capped at 50, ideally with a live or near-live counter.
- Lead magnet delivery: paperback request form for First Impressions, Final Decisions (postal address capture, not PDF download), plus PDF/email delivery for the White Knight Positioning Report (the 7 Costly Mistakes guide).
- Editorial CMS for ongoing publishing – a FAME Insights / Journal section.
- Live or near-live NPS display with trend chart and a methodology page.
- Booking integration with Dentally (practice management) and lead capture into Leadflow (CRM).
- Insights/Journal Newsletter capture – unobtrusive, footer-anchored, no popups.
- Schema markup, FAQ blocks, AEO-optimised content structure on every page.
- Webflow CMS configured for non-developer content updates

Provide an email ID to send email for 'Contact us/ 'Appointment request' form

We are setting up enquiry-type-specific inboxes. To be confirmed and provided to your team in writing once finalised.

Is there any external link / patient portal link we need to include?

Yes – Dentally's patient portal once the practice is operational. Link to follow.

Website Content

Do you have high-quality images and other media ready for use on the website? (Center images, equipment images, before-after images, logo)

- Logo: yes – supplied separately
- Photography of the building, interiors, founders and clinical workflow: in commission. We need your input on the brief so the shoot aligns with the design direction.
- Video: planned for phase 2 (post-opening), including a Ferhan introduction film and a 'behind the experience' walkthrough.

- Before-and-after imagery: deliberately not a focus for v1. The buyer-stage analysis tells us before-and-afters convert at later stages of the journey, not on the homepage.

List out your top 4 services for your website.

In order of strategic emphasis:

1. Dental Implants & Full Mouth Reconstruction – led by Ferhan.
2. Cosmetic & Aesthetic Dentistry – Composite Bonding, Veneers, Smile Design – led by Tariq.
3. Concierge Dental Care for Business Leaders – a service overlay across the above. Functions as a top-level navigation item, not a treatment.
4. Complex Restorative & Referred Cases – the work that comes from other dentists. This is content that supports the referring-dentist audience and signals expertise to consumer patients (per the White Knight report's Mistake #1).

The typical dental site lists a dozen services with equal weight – check-ups, hygiene, whitening, root canals, etc. We are not doing that. The site should make it clear from page one that FAME is built for complex implant and cosmetic work. Other treatments are available but should not lead the navigation.

Are there any additional services you would like to add to the Service list that is not on your current website?

Yes – a Pre-Surgical Patient Optimisation service.

This leverages Ferhan's dual medical qualification to deliver specific pre-surgical workup tests that are not commonly carried out in a dental practice. The service is directly linked to the surgical work he already does – it is not a general wellness, nutrition or longevity offering – and it positions the practice distinctively for patients, particularly performance-minded professionals, who value being properly optimised ahead of a procedure rather than treated reactively. The angle also opens industry partnership potential that the website does not currently signal.

Any financial details or insurance details to be mentioned?

- Treatment fees: by consultation only. We will not publish a price list (beyond regulatory requirements), and the reasoning is positional, not financial. Our market doesn't make decisions on a price grid.

- Finance options will be available; we'll provide details once finalised.
- We do not work with NHS – we are a private fee-for-service only. The site should make this clear without making it the headline.

Are there any restrictions or clauses with your current vendor that prevent us from using the existing content on your current website?

No. Edinburgh Dental and Tariq Bashir Dentistry are existing separate brands; FAME is a new entity with new content. Nothing carries over from either site.

Additional Information

Is there anything else you would like to share about your vision for the website?

Three things:

1. We are not building a dental website. We're building the digital expression of a category-defining practice. The bar is closer to a private bank or members' club than to a healthcare provider – and we know that's a meaningful jump from your standard dental engagement.
2. Performance is non-negotiable, but it cannot flatten the storytelling. Most dental SEO sites read like spreadsheets in prose. We need both – AEO-optimised structure AND editorial voice. We don't want to compromise on either.
3. We have substantial existing assets. Book, recruitment manifesto, lead magnets, positioning frameworks, branded collateral, NPS research. The website's job is to weave these into a coherent ecosystem, not to start from scratch. The supplementary brief lists the assets and where they sit on the site.

Additional Questions

Visual World

When you imagine someone like a KPMG partner or a Morgan Stanley MD landing on this site, what's the first feeling you want them to have?

Calm authority with quiet, deliberate confidence. Not 'luxury' in the obvious sense – gold trim, marble, big claims. That audience can smell try-hard from the homepage.

'Trusted insider' is closest. The site should feel like something a peer recommended – a fellow CEO, a private banker – not something they found via an ad. The first 5 seconds should produce: 'these people clearly know what they're doing, and they don't need to shout about it.'

Are there any brands, websites, or experiences – dental or otherwise – whose visual language speaks to you? Even outside healthcare.

Outside dentistry:

- Soho House, Edition Hotels, Aman – insider, members'-club warmth without screaming 'luxury'.
- Coutts – old-money credibility translated into current digital language.
- Le Labo – storytelling through videography (I thought £105 for a denim tote bag was insane until I watched the video.)

Inside healthcare – rare, but worth noting:

- Mayo Clinic – the seriousness of clinical authority done well in digital.
- Maven Clinic – B2B-grade credibility while remaining warm.

Also:

HIMS: <https://www.hims.com/>

RO: <https://ro.co/>

NOT for our visual direction – but their funnel discipline and lead capture engineering is the standard we want to match. Editorial brand on the surface, conversion engine underneath.

Any strong preferences or hard nos on colour, typography, or aesthetic direction?

Hard nos:

- Stock smile photography.
- Gradient backgrounds in any colour combination.
- Floating 'Book Now' CTAs that follow the user.
- Pop-up newsletter forms on entry.

- Live chat widgets that pop up unsolicited.
- 'Meet the team' carousel galleries with everyone in matching scrubs.
- Trust-badge clutter – a row of NHS/GDC/BDA/CQC logos across the homepage. They belong in the footer if anywhere.
- Hero-image-with-text-overlay-and-CTA template.
- Cookie banners that take over the viewport.

Strong preferences:

- Custom typography pairing – one strong display face with a high-readability serif or grotesque for body. Open to your recommendations; we can supply the FAME wordmark typeface as a starting point.
- Genuine whitespace.
- Type hierarchy strong enough that the page is navigable with the eye in 5 seconds.
- Imagery that feels commissioned, not curated.

Design Elements & Structure

Layout feel: minimal and editorial vs richer and more immersive?

Minimal and editorial. Depth comes from the substance of the content, not from visual layering. Each long-form section should feel like a deliberate read, not a brochure spread.

Imagery direction: high-end lifestyle vs clinical and precise vs blend?

Blend, weighted toward lifestyle for the homepage and concierge service, and toward clinical-precise for the treatment and complex case pages. Training and referrals lean clinical.

Worth flagging: 'lifestyle' here is not aspirational beach photography. It's executive environments – a CEO at his desk, a private car arriving at a discreet entrance, a planning meeting in the consultation suite, a pen on a leather diary.

Hero section: what should greet someone the moment they land – Ferhan and Tariq's story, a bold statement about the concierge model, a visual of the experience, or something else?

Strong recommendation: a confident editorial statement that does the heavy lifting in 12 words or less, paired with a single strong image of the building or interior. Not a carousel. Not Ferhan and Tariq's faces immediately.

People-first hero treatment works for personal brands. The FAME brand is bigger than its founders – it should let the practice stand for itself, with the founders introduced one click in. Telling the founder story in the hero diminishes both the founders and the brand.

The Ferhan-and-Tariq story belongs on a dedicated Founders page, with the depth their reputations deserve.

Navigation: traditional, full-screen, or minimal?

Recommendation: minimal, traditional bar.

- Logo top-left.
- Five to six nav items maximum, right-aligned.
- Sticky on scroll, no autohide. We're thinking busy business leaders skim; they don't scroll deeply on a first visit.

Full-screen menus look stylish but might signal 'portfolio site' to a business audience. They add friction we don't need.

Animations and interactions: dynamic and cinematic vs refined and still?

Refined and still, with one or two intentional moments of motion: a subtle ken-burns on the hero image, a single scroll-triggered reveal on the NPS section. We are concerned that a professional audience may design as a decision making distraction.

If a particular interaction is doing genuine narrative work – illustrating the concierge journey, for example – we're open to looking at that. But the default should be restraint.

Storytelling & Content

How much of Ferhan's and Tariq's personal story, personality, and philosophy do you want front and centre vs. woven in subtly?

Subtly woven into the homepage; deeply explored on dedicated pages.

The dual qualification, training reputation, and personal narratives are some of our most powerful trust assets – but front-loading them on the homepage shifts the brand from 'FAME Dentistry, a practice' to 'Ferhan Ahmed, a personality cult that happens to do dentistry.' That isn't the positioning we want for the practice, even though Ferhan's personal brand is being built in parallel via LinkedIn, the book and the forthcoming podcast.

Recommended hierarchy:

- Homepage – practice-led, with Ferhan and Tariq introduced as a paired credit.
- 'Founders' page – deep dive into both, with Ferhan's medicine-and-dentistry dual qualification and the training reputation given full treatment.
- Concierge page – Ferhan-led storytelling, because he is the visible face of the concierge service.
- Insights/Journal – where Ferhan's voice as a thought-leader lives publicly.

The Executive Presence book is extraordinary – do you see it as a lead magnet, a credibility piece, or both? How prominently should it feature?

Both. Three roles:

1. Credibility piece. Its existence signals that Ferhan thinks at a level few dentists do. Visible on the homepage and Founders page as a small, confident reference.
2. Lead magnet. For the business-leader audience, the paperback request form is the primary conversion tool. We're getting it on people's desks, not as a PDF download – the postal-address capture is part of the asset's job.
3. Distribution asset. A strategic alliance is being explored (HSBC is a candidate sponsor) to put copies in front of a defined business audience at zero cost. This affects how the book is presented – the alliance partner may be co-branded later.

Prominent placement on a dedicated landing page; a subtle reference on the homepage. Not 'buy our book' energy. Closer to: 'we wrote this for our community – request a copy.'

Will you be providing the primary copy (with Claude as your thinking partner, as you mentioned), or would you like us involved in shaping the narrative structure too?

John will provide primary copy with Claude as thinking partner. Your input will be sought – and explicitly invited – on:

- Information architecture and navigation flow.
- SEO/AEO structural recommendations – FAQ frameworks, schema, headings strategy.

- Page-by-page brief recommendations: what jobs each page should do.
- Word count and depth recommendations per page.

We are not looking for you to write the copy; we are looking for you to direct us on placement and what form it should take.

Experience & Function

For the concierge booking flow – PA-to-PA coordination, office consultations, transport – how do you envision someone initiating contact? Form, call, WhatsApp, or something more bespoke?

Multi-channel, with a single PA-led human follow-up:

- Primary: form submission with name, organisation, role, and a short note. Auto-acknowledgement, then a personal call back from Ferhan's PA (or the FAME front-of-house lead) within two hours during business hours.
- Secondary: a direct phone number on the contact and concierge pages, answered by a human.
- Tertiary: WhatsApp – a contact option, not a primary conversion path.

We are not building an instant online booking calendar for the concierge service. The first interaction is a relationship, not a transaction. Online booking for routine recall appointments may be added later – that's a CMS decision once the practice is operating.

Are there any specific pages or sections you already have in mind that feel non-negotiable?

- Homepage
- Individual, full depth pages for both Ferhan and Tariq
- Concierge – the business-leader proposition
- Implants – with explicit positioning per the White Knight report ('the dentists other dentists refer to')
- Cosmetic/smile design
- Founding Members – programme description and application form
- Insights/Journal – publishing platform
- For Referring Dentists – peer-facing language, separate tone
- About FAME – NPS mission, philosophy, magnificent experiences

- Contact
- Lead-magnet landings:
 - First Impressions, Final Decisions – paperback request
 - White Knight Positioning Report/7 Costly Mistakes – PDF
- For Other Dentists/Training – likely on training.famedentistry.com
- Referrals portal – likely on referrals.famedentistry.com
- Press/Media

This is obviously too many for header and top level navigation – we will need your objectivity to decide on which babies we keep and which are relegated to the footer nav!

And finally ...

Two things from us, alongside this document:

- The supplementary brief, which expands on the audience architecture, the referring-dentist positioning, the NPS-as-live-element decision, and the phasing logic for subdomains.
- A request – could you provide your proposed sitemap and information architecture before we move to design directions, so the structural conversation happens before the visual one.
